THE RIVA COLLECTION

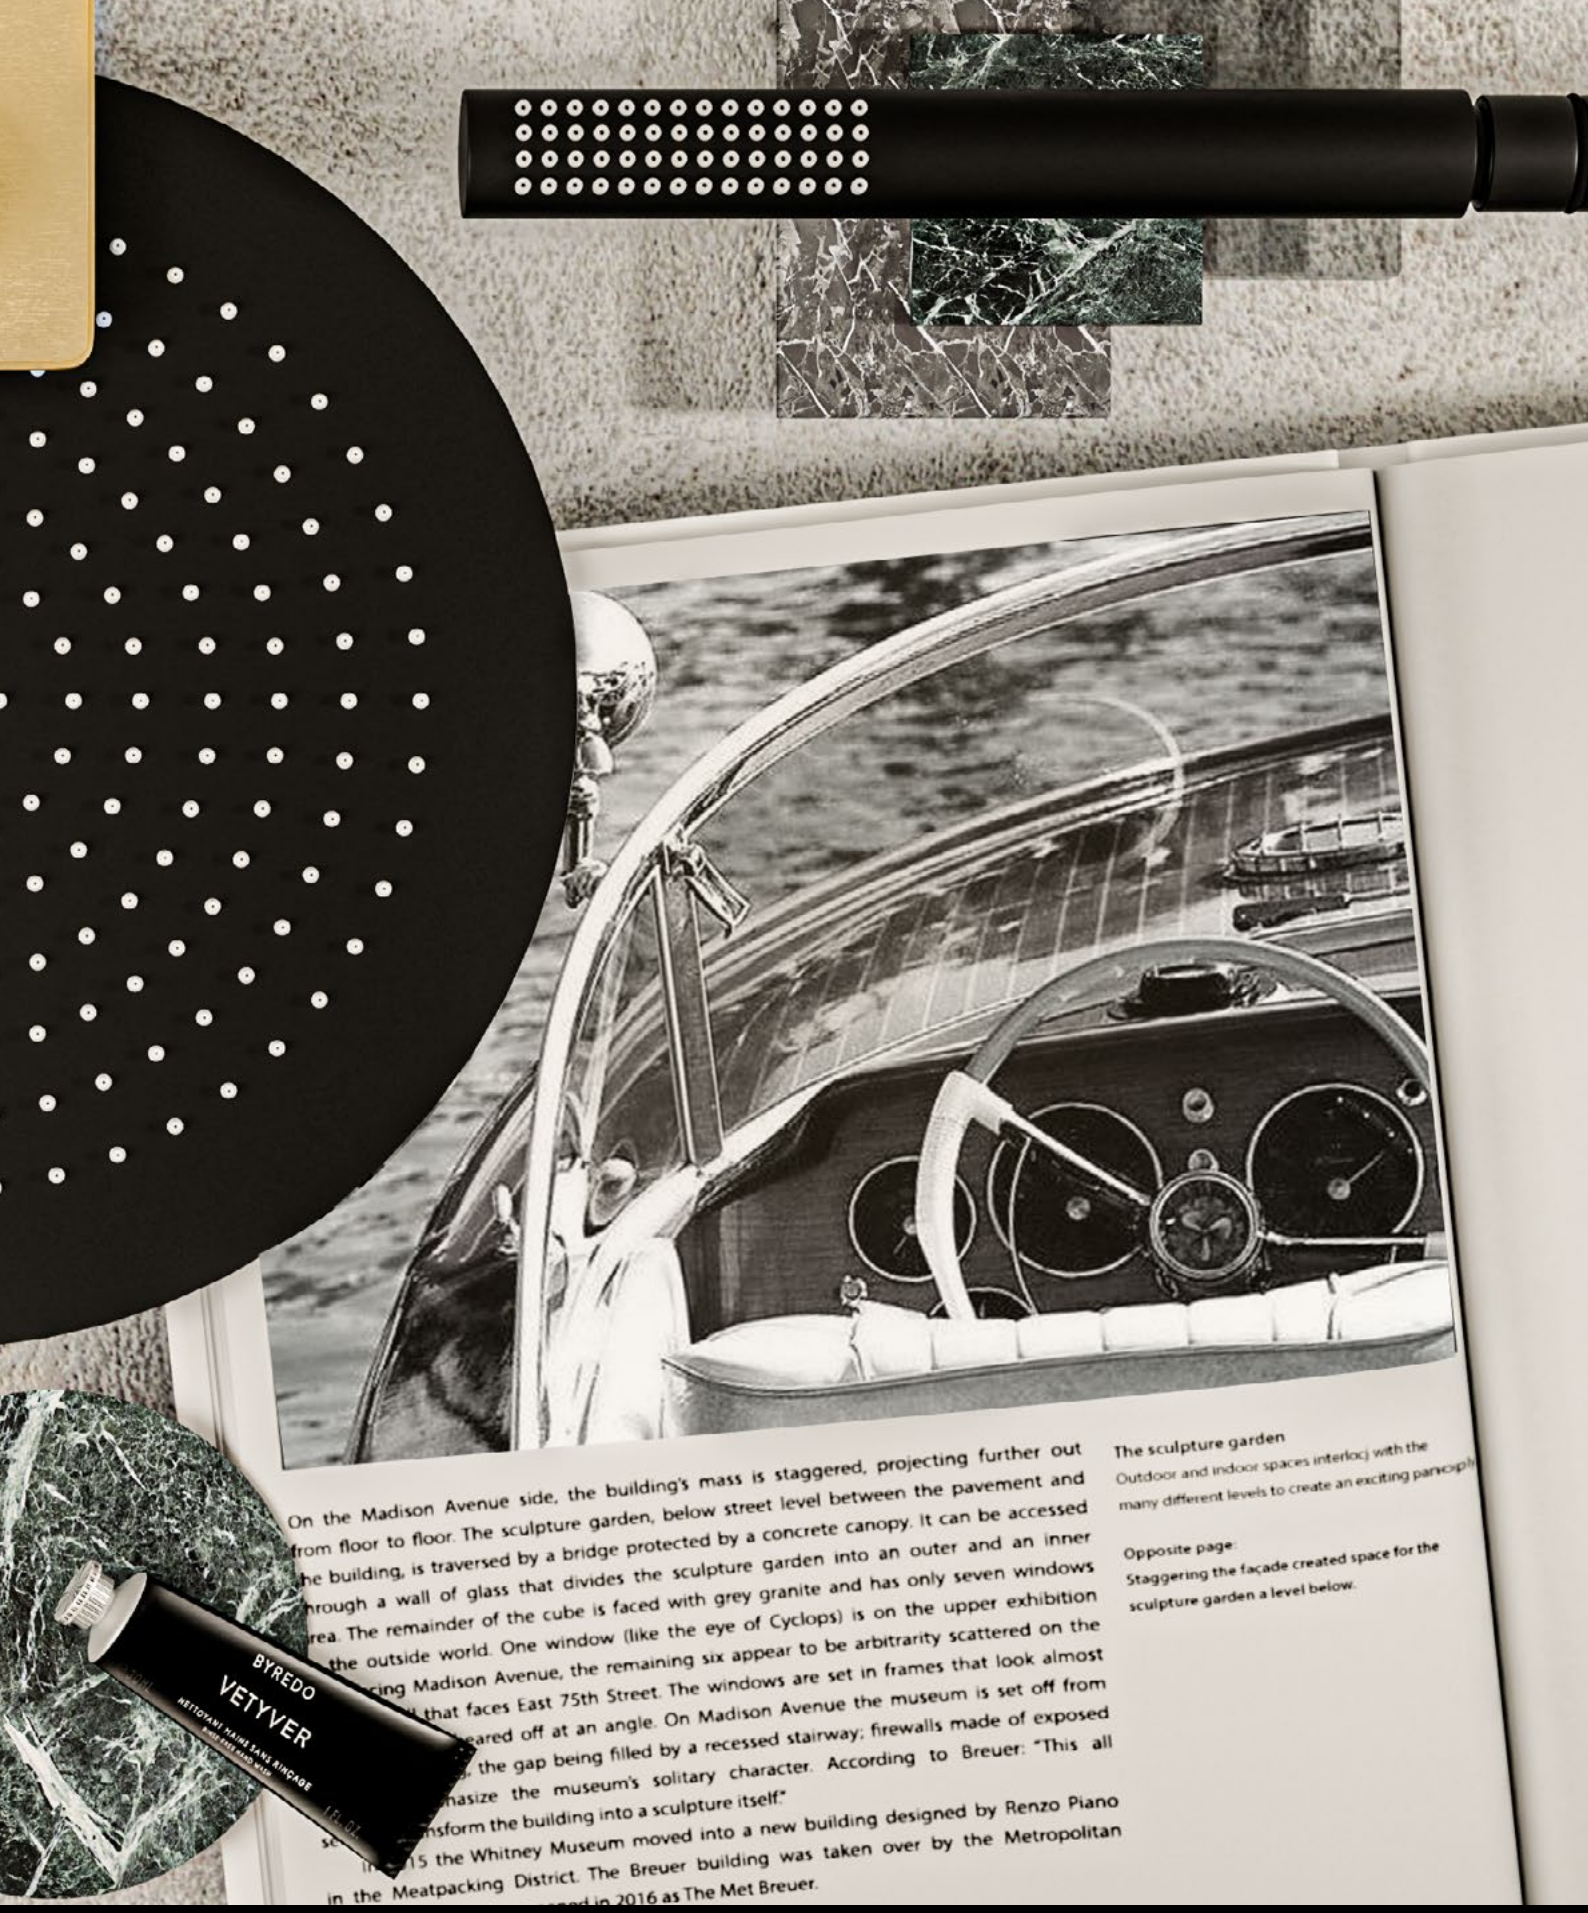
REDEFINING EVERYDAY LUXURY

Inspired by classic cars, this design combines timeless elegance with modern functionality, offering a luxurious and high-performance experience that elevates the everyday

DESIGNED FOR WELLNESS



The sculpture garden
Outdoor and indoor spaces interloc with the many different levels to create an exciting panoply

Opposite page:
Staggering the façade created space for the sculpture garden a level below.

On the Madison Avenue side, the building's mass is staggered, projecting further out from floor to floor. The sculpture garden, below street level between the pavement and the building, is traversed by a bridge protected by a concrete canopy. It can be accessed through a wall of glass that divides the sculpture garden into an outer and an inner area. The remainder of the cube is faced with grey granite and has only seven windows the outside world. One window (like the eye of Cyclops) is on the upper exhibition cing Madison Avenue, the remaining six appear to be arbitrarity scattered on the that faces East 75th Street. The windows are set in frames that look almost ared off at an angle. On Madison Avenue the museum is set off from the gap being filled by a recessed stairway; firewalls made of exposed hasize the museum's solitary character. According to Breuer: "This all nsform the building into a sculpture itself."

15 the Whitney Museum moved into a new building designed by Renzo Piano in the Meatpacking District. The Breuer building was taken over by the Metropolitan ed in 2016 as The Met Breuer.

Anticipation builds for the shower that is the epitome of precision wellness, designed with uncompromising attention to the fine details that enhance life and please the senses.

THE RIVA COLLECTION

This sleek new shower system was inspired by the finely tooled dashboards of European luxury cars and yachts. The RIVA shower system evokes the pleasures of driving a luxurious sports car or yachting along a magnificent Mediterranean coastline.

ELEGANCE IN THE DETAILS

Every element of the collection is distinguished by refined, elegant details, meticulously crafted to express a timeless aesthetic.

REFINED INTELLIGENCE

Cutting-edge technology enhances everyday comfort and wellbeing, seamlessly integrated into a refined and sophisticated design.
